The New Jewish Theatre was an outgrowth of the long history of theatre programming of the Jewish Community Center. In 1997, the need was recognized to develop a professional theatre program with programming that reflected the Jewish experience. The theatre has continued to grow at an exponential rate, both in size and in quality. The original season of three productions of eight performances has expanded to the current season's five productions of 12 performances each.

The New Jewish Theatre's home is the state-of-the-art Marvin & Harlene Wool Studio Theater, located in the Arts & Education Building of the J's Staenberg Family Complex.
